Circling the Inverse Square

Dan Adler and Shannon Anderson

Artists who share a fascination with science create works that are neither illustrative of scientific principles nor concerned with presenting arguments toward any particular issue in theoretical physics. Instead, they attempt to elucidate the inconceivable.

Jason de Haan: Nogwhere Bodili is Everywhere Goostly

Richard Rhodes, Nicholas Brown, Candice Hopkins, Ryan Doherty, David Diviney, Crystal Mowry, and Gustaf Sobin

Since the early 2000s Jason de Haan has made a name for himself with sculptures, collages, installations and public projects that engage time, especially the long-scale perception of time. Like Duchamp, his goal is to make an art that signifies more than just its three dimensions.

Ecotopia

Amanda Cachia, Ernest Callanbach, Anthony Vidler

This thematic publication of a group exhibition explores the confluence of nature and human intervention that has had both glorious and profoundly dispiriting effects on the world in which we live. Twelve artists approach the natural and built environment with anxiety, humor, irony, amazement and terror.
